1. The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) Social Affairs Department sent LIANG Ts'un-fu (梁村夫) to accompany the troops which occupied Tibet and entered Lhasa. LIANG, a native of Szechuan Province, had concurrently held the posts of chief of the Second Bureau of the Social Affairs Department of the Southwest China Bureau and chief of the investigation and Research Bureau of the United Front Department. In 1949, as Director of the South Yangtze Office, 2 Field Army, he was an able assistant to LIU Po-ch'ang and participated in the successful instigation of a revolutionary movement among certain Nationalist generals in Szechuan before the 2 Field Army entered Southwest China.
2. The CCP decided to appoint LIANG director of the Social Affairs Department of the Tibet Working Committee, which is to become the Tibet Sub-Bureau of the CCP, and concurrently director of the Public Security Department of the Tibet Military and Administrative Committee. A large number of Social Affairs Department cadres accompanied LIANG to Tibet, and a second group was to follow. In October 1951 a portion of this second group was assembled at Yushu (96-52, 33-01), including cadres from the Northwest China Bureau plus 23 others led by JUI Hsien (苟先), section chief of the Social Affairs Department, CCP Municipal Committee for Peiping. Among the latter were cadres appointed by the CCP Central Social Affairs Department, students with a knowledge of Sanskrit drafted from the East Asia Languages Training Class, and other cadres who had been born in Tibet and were attending the Minority Races Academy (民族學院).<sup>1</sup>
